McShane, 2014-12-05 In the past decade the number of students enrolled in private school choice programs has grown ten fold But granting students access to public financing for their private education has not led to the vibrant marketplace of school options many of its supporters envisioned If school choice policy is to improve the American education landscape careful thought must be put in to understand how it can expand existing high quality schools and create new high quality schools to serve more children New and Better Schools attacks this problem from the perspective of both researchers and practitioners documenting the hurdles entrepreneurial school leaders face and offering a way forward

Daze Gone Bye Terry Lloyd Vinson, 2025-07-01 The hours following high school graduation represent the final dusk before dawn when adolescence officially ends and adulthood begins The 1980 class of Baymont High are shedding their caps and gowns for one final glorious night of youthful shenanigans where time tested rituals of generations past will be served with unrestrained tomfoolery and hilarity Cruising the streets of smalltown USA engines will be revved pranks unleashed and fast food and bootleg booze ingested even as old grudges are settled and childhood friendships face unavoidable closure You are cordially invited to spend the next twelve hours with the class of 80 for a wild magical and wholly unchecked night of thrills spills and pathos the equal of which they will never again experience

From High School to College Charles Hirschman, 2016-08-31 Today over 75 percent of high school seniors aspire to graduate from college However only one third of Americans hold a bachelor s degree and college graduation rates vary significantly by race ethnicity and parental socioeconomic status If most young adults aspire to obtain a college degree why are these disparities so great In From High School to College Charles Hirschman analyzes the period between leaving high school and completing college for nearly 10 000 public and private school students across the Pacific Northwest Hirschman finds that although there are few gender racial or immigration related disparities in students aspirations to attend and complete college certain groups succeed at the highest rates For example he finds that women achieve better high school grades and report receiving more support and encouragement from family peers and educators They tend to outperform men in terms of preparing for college enrolling in college within a year of finishing high school and completing a degree Similarly second generation immigrants are better prepared for college than first generation immigrants in part because they do not have to face language barriers or learn how to navigate the American educational system Hirschman also documents that racial disparities in college graduation rates remain stark In his sample 35 percent of white students graduated from college within seven years of completing high school compared to only 19 percent of black students and 18 percent of Hispanic students Students socioeconomic origins including parental education and employment home ownership and family structure account for most of the college graduation gap between disadvantaged minorities and white students Further while a few Asian ethnic groups have achieved college completion rates on par with whites such as Chinese and Koreans others whose socioeconomic origins more resemble those of black and Hispanic students such as Filipinos and Cambodians also lag behind in preparedness enrollment and graduation from college With a growing number of young adults seeking college degrees understanding the barriers that different students encounter provides vital information for social scientists and educators From High School to College illuminates how gender immigration and ethnicity influence the path to college graduation
