Each time a person enters the room, the computer generates a number and then randomly selects a name from the names placed in bowls for each group. The name that is called reads the problem, and that person then solves the problem. A new problem is then placed in the bowl and another name is called. This entire sequence is repeated for fifteen to twenty problems.

After the problems are all completed, each is read aloud. The group that has the greatest number of correct answers for average scores is designated the winning group and wins a prize. The problem awarded to the team with the greatest number of correct answers is designated the winner.

The teacher takes fifteen to twenty minutes to read the problems aloud and the students answer for the teacher. The time needed for the students to solve each problem for themselves is not counted against the time for the problem. Reading each problem aloud and having the students answer, and then checking answers, takes about twenty minutes.

After all the problems are solved, the teacher reads the problems aloud. The students check their answers and the teacher checks the answers. The teacher then reads the problems aloud and the students check their answers.
