Most differences between chapter 1 of the novel and parts 1-3 of the allegory is that the novel is focused on the relationship between white and black men most times. This message is more obvious when we look at the characters, and whether or not they are black/white or the opposite. For the example we're taking as the novel is Harlem, which differs from the short-story because in the short-story, the character who is Cal Phillips, who is a famous abolitionist. The addition of this character makes the novel by making it more about racial and political. Since Phillips is presented as a wealthy abolitionist, the author wants to let us see that he is wrong and that he is wrong about the other side, showing it too much more and making the author's point.
