Abstract: Chlamydia trachomatis is the most common sexually transmitted infection in the United States. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of C. trachomatis in a community-based sample of young adults. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a community-based sample of 1,000 young adults (ages 18-24) in a large, urban, multiethnic community. The prevalence of C. trachomatis was 1.8% (95% CI 0.8-3.8%). The prevalence was significantly higher among those who were sexually active (3.2%) than among those who were not sexually active (0.2%). The prevalence was also significantly higher among those who had a history of sexually transmitted infection (3.5%) than among those who had not (1.2%). The prevalence was not significantly different by race or ethnicity. The results of this study suggest that the prevalence of C. trachomatis is higher among sexually active young adults than among non-sexually active young adults. The results also suggest that the prevalence of C. trachomatis is higher among those with a history of sexually transmitted infection than among those without a history of sexually transmitted infection.
