somewhere in his twenties Rohan forgot his culinary heritage and it wasn't until he was bringing up his own young family that he began to think more about his identity as a second generation immigrant and the binding identifying power of the family meal caught his imagination And so he began this beautifully written funny poignant memoir of his heritage and his home Of curry leaves and curried chips Hot chillis and hot dogs Pataks and Heinz About the past and the present and the place where time should cease to matter the family kitchen
