The consensus for the future of the show, though, is that it's here to stay. "But everybody will go to the other side of the coin," says executive producer Dan Gheesling. "The network's got to figure out how to make it work. It's a challenge, but it's going to be a great reward when you succeed." Gheesling says that the show's success will depend on the network's ability to make it work. "It's a challenge, but it's going to be a great reward when you succeed."
