American Industrial Revolution

Directions: Read the passage about the American Industrial Revolution and Samuel Slater. On page two, write details from the passage that are important in explaining the American Industrial Revolution.

The American Industrial Revolution

Samuel Slater, born in Belper, Derbyshire, England in June, 1768, is credited with being the Father of the American Industrial Revolution. Slater apprenticed in England at a cotton mill with machinery developed by Richard Arkwright and rose to be the superintendent learning all about the machines used in the mills.

Slater felt the textile industry had reached its peak in England and so secretly emigrated to America. Here, with backers from Providence, Rhode Island, Slater built the first successful water powered textile mill in Pawtucket, RI, on the Blackstone River, in 1793. The mill was powered by a waterwheel.

By the time other businesses entered the industry, Slater's ideas had become the model. Later known as the Rhode Island System, Slater hired whole families, including children, to work in his mills. These families generally lived in company housing, shopped in company stores, and went to company schools and churches nearby. The Blackstone River's steep drops and numerous falls allowed for perfect conditions for the building of small, rural textile mills around which grew small villages, such as Slatersville, found in North Smithfield, RI. Workmen came from all over to learn about Samuel Slater's machines so they could set up their own mills.

Slater Mill created cotton thread until 1921 with various owners and renters who changed its structure to suit whatever enterprise they pursued; such as jewelers' tools, coffin trimmings, cardboard, and bicycles.
