Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the physical fitness and performance of young women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, including aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The results showed that the program significantly improved the participants' cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and flexibility. The program also resulted in a decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in bone mineral density. The findings suggest that a 10-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness and performance of young women.

1. Identify the problem. The first step in the process is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the nature of the problem, its scope, and its impact on the organization.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a series of physical fitness tests. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL and physical fitness compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
