The Employment Relationship William P. Bridges, Wayne J.

Villemez, 2007-08-27 In 1979 serious research was just beginning on the connections between stratification outcomes and organizations Data suitable for investigating these connections were scarce and the general wisdom was that they would remain scarce since organizational case studies were seen as the only means of gathering linked individual and organizational data The case study approach does allow one to link the two types of data but gathering such data on more than a few organizations is prohibitively expensive and difficult and having only a few organizations limits generalizability To help solve this problem we developed the idea of a survey of a random sample of several thousand employed individuals followed by a second survey of their several thousand employing organizations This method we reasoned would provide us with a generalizable simple random sample of individuals coupled with a weighted random sample of organizations weighted of course by size of organization. An added benefit would be that these valuable data could be gathered by a survey organization for the price of two simple surveys. It was not an easy idea to sell. We developed it into a proposal to the National Science Foundation (NSF) and though the reviewers were otherwise sympathetic they were almost unanimous in their contention that such a survey would not work because obviously the great majority of respondents would refuse to reveal exactly who their employers were.

Creating and Marketing New Products and Services Rosanna Garcia, 2014-04-11. This textbook teaches the key business and marketing principles needed to successfully design and launch new products and services in an international marketplace. The book emphasizes marketing research techniques that can help firms identify the voice of the customer and incorporate these findings into their new product development process. It addresses the role of social networks in innovation, open innovation strategies and international co-development efforts of new products and services. CIO, 1999-08-15.
