This biogeographical model would be the most relevant to Laporte's taxonomy since it offers complementary approaches. Further, current taxonomic conditions related to intermediate taxonomic/biological geographical and social factors are Laporte's focus, after biogeographical model-based changes have varying consequences that involve selected members of his family with scientific relevance either as new or old species or subspecies.

Children are a heterogeneous group of learners, requiring personalization. Personalization is a broad understanding of how the individual learner brings a unique internal structure, history, ability, and ability, and specific personal beliefs, expectations, and experiences that influence their learning. It is a concept that is not a single, but a collection of concepts that are interconnected and all of which are important to understanding the learner. From a learner's history, we can see the child, which influences his participation in learning. Learning is a process that is not a single, but a collection of concepts that are interconnected and all of which are important to understanding the learner.
