To Whom It May Concern,

I was Tom Smith's cooperating teacher for his student teaching assignment during the Spring, 2011 semester. Tom completed fourteen weeks of student teaching in my United States History Classes under my supervision. During this time he taught three units of study incorporating a variety of activities for all skill levels.

During Tom's student teaching experience, he was highly motivated to learn as much as he could and perform to his best capacities. He frequently put in long hours to develop lesson plans and monitor student progress. He asked for feedback on a daily basis and accepted constructive criticism with maturity.

Tom has several strengths, but his main strength, from my observations, is his ability to motivate students. He was always sincerely interested in his students' progress and encouraged them to try their best in every activity. He presented new material in a way that captured their attention. For example, he had a group of students map out a "road-trip" across the United States. The students had to plan the trip to include a given number of state and national parks, major cities, and historic battle sites. The students really dived into the project with enthusiasm. Tom consistently displayed this type of creativity in planning lessons and motivating students. He quickly learned that the best way to manage a classroom is to keep students on task with projects that were both interesting and challenging. He also did a good job of recognizing when a student needed special assistance or attention and sought additional resources whenever needed.

In summary, Tom displayed the qualities that make a teacher successful. He is dependable, motivated, and in tune with the needs of his students. He works well with colleagues and administration and is able to learn from those around him. I highly recommend him for a teaching position.

Sincerely,

John Green
