

Writing a Police Report

Writing Basics

Writing police reports is different from writing traditional essays. This specific style of writing requires its own rules and conventions. While some expectations for police report writing may differ depending on the police department, certain basic guidelines universally apply. Police reports are written in first person, past tense and organized in chronological order.

When writing a police report, you also want to abide by the 4 C's:

- Clear: Try to be as specific as possible. Avoid any vague statements or phrases.
- Concise: Avoid overly wordy language. Keep statements simple and direct.
- Complete: Include all relevant information.
- Correct: Make sure that the information you include is accurate and unbiased.

Formatting

Formatting refers to how information is organized and how the report is laid out on the page.

- The heading should contain the report date, title, narrative report, and officer name
- The body should be written in paragraph form, left-justified, and single-spaced with a double space between paragraphs

The Introduction The introduction establishes why you are on the scene and includes:

- Date
- Time (in military time)
- Location
- The nature of the call or incident
- Why you were at the scene
- Additional officers if present (and when those officers arrived on the scene) Example:

On 04/04/2018, at approximately 2100 hours, I responded to a theft report at 30 Chopin Drive.

The diagram illustrates the components of the example sentence: "On 04/04/2018, at approximately 2100 hours, I responded to a theft report at 30 Chopin Drive." Brackets are used to group the text into five parts: "04/04/2018" (Date), "at approximately 2100 hours" (Time), "I" (Officer), "responded to a theft report" (Incident), and "at 30 Chopin Drive" (Location).
