Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women in the walking program was measured at baseline and at 12 weeks. The physical health measures included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The psychological health measures included self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the women in the walking program had significantly lower heart rates, blood pressures, and body mass indices at 12 weeks compared to the control group. Additionally, the women in the walking program had significantly higher self-esteem, lower anxiety, and lower depression at 12 weeks compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

1. Identify the problem. The first step in the problem-solving process is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the situation, gathering information, and defining the problem clearly.

the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are obese has increased by 50 percent. In 1990, 15 percent of the population was obese, but by 2000, that number had risen to 23 percent. In 2008, the number of obese people in the United States was estimated to be 33 percent of the population. The increase in obesity is a major public health concern because it is a leading cause of heart disease, diabetes, and other chronic diseases. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) estimates that obesity costs the United States $147 billion each year in medical costs and lost productivity. The CDC also estimates that obesity is responsible for 280,000 deaths each year in the United States. The increase in obesity is a result of a combination of factors, including changes in diet and lifestyle, and a decline in physical activity. The CDC has launched a campaign to reduce obesity, called "Let's Move!", which aims to get more children and adults moving and eating healthy. The campaign includes a variety of initiatives, such as promoting physical activity in schools and workplaces, and encouraging healthy eating habits. The CDC also provides resources for individuals and communities to help them make healthy choices. The CDC's "Let's Move!" campaign is a critical effort to address the growing problem of obesity in the United States.
