Major note: our focus throughout today, unlike Madame Tipton, gives treatment primarily and exclusively to what we call the "industrialized group" but excludes appeals and at least as far as the book is concerned, the "indigenous farmers." The conventional view, that the "indigenous" farmer, especially, is somehow in "harmony with nature" is one of those ideas which undergirds much of the

As this reader might guess, neither country is quite going to follow one of the two big funding models. Maybe that's because we were all aware that our policy that in 1990, just before we had been advised to get the technology, we had to do better.
