Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Reports United States. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 2005-07

Evaluation of Corrosion Resistance of Microalloyed Reinforcing Steel Javier Balma, 2004 The corrosion resistance of three microalloyed steels and two conventional reinforcing steels in concrete was evaluated The microalloyed steels contain concentrations of chromium copper and phosphorus that while low are significantly higher than used in conventional reinforcing steel Two of the microalloyed steels contain amounts of phosphorus that exceed the amounts allowed in ASTM specifications ASTM A 615 while the other microalloyed steel has normal amounts of phosphorus One of the conventional steels and the three microalloyed steels are heat treated by the Thermex process which includes quenching and tempering of the steel immediately after rolling while the other conventional steel is hot rolled The study was undertaken because earlier tests on similar steels indicated that the Thermex treated microalloyed steel corrodes at only one half the rate of conventional reinforcing steel The relative corrosion rate dropped to one tenth if both steels were epoxy coated In the current study the reinforcing steels were tested using two rapid evaluation tests the corrosion potential and corrosion macrocell tests and three bench scale tests the Southern Exposure cracked beam and ASTM G 109 tests The corrosion potential corrosion rate and mat to mat resistance are used to evaluate the steel Tension and bending tests were performed to evaluate the effect of the microalloying and heat treatment on the mechanical properties of the reinforcing steel
