

Summary: Plot Summary

Only right, the spirit of the late King appears to Harris and reveals that his seemingly accidental death was actually premeditated. The revelation that his mother was responsible for his death, the King's murder, and Harris's death, is triggered by the thought that Guadalupe murdered his mother's former bodyguard, who was a friend of his.

Reading, however, like those of Hamlet's other friends, King Claudius and Queen Gertrude, assumes a perspective and a confidence that Hamlet's mother lacks. In fact, all perspectives are limited, and Claudius' perspective is a particularly confident one. He is the only character who has had one of Hamlet's mental steps. He knows what other people have done, Claudius has heard Hamlet in bed, and Hamlet suggests that he attempt to seduce his mother. He is a very confident, forward, logical, and rational. Queen Gertrude, meanwhile, is somewhat of a sitting duck. Hamlet's desire to have her perform a play that will reveal his father's murderer is, in essence, watching Claudius during his murder scene, in the hope that Claudius's excessive reaction to it will reveal his guilt. (The Gertrude Hamlet sees Claudius in prison and realizes that this would be the perfect time to get him out of the country and kill him. Gertrude would be so relieved after Claudius is gone, she would be so happy that she would not even think of getting him out of the country and killing him.)

As a farmer grows to impact his or her community, thinking becomes more sophisticated and a growing reliance on the marketplace (often through local food systems) takes hold. The opportunity to improve the quality of life in the community is a natural goal. However, farmers in local food systems increasingly find themselves in competition for program dollars, markets, and other resources with large agribusiness. Improving the quality of life in the community, especially when agribusiness drives the local food system, has not been a priority for many farmers and agribusinesses. However, as the local food system becomes more sophisticated, farmers are not only competing for access to markets, but also for the ability to improve the quality of life in the community. Improving the quality of life in the community is a goal that farmers and agribusinesses should be encouraged to pursue.
