ABSTRACT

The Mental Health Review Tribunal (MHRT) Rules 1983 place a statutory responsibility on the Responsible Authority to provide the tribunal with a formal medical report. Such reports are valuable records providing a systemic and evidence-based viewpoint for detaining an individual under the Mental Health Act 1983 (MHA). The reports allow the treating team to present its concerns and subsequent care package to the tribunal, whose members could be from a non-mental health background. There is evidence that the majority of the MHRT reports do not satisfactorily meet the tribunal's requirements. Recent literature has indicated that the circulation of structured guidelines has resulted in improved quality of the reports.

The authors undertook an audit cycle to test the above hypothesis. A preliminary audit ascertained the current practice of MHRT report-making in Cornwall. The reports were objectively assessed against 'gold standards' of a comparative framework of eighteen criteria laid out by the Royal College of Psychiatrists. The guidelines were circulated in the form of a template and a re-audit carried out to ascertain any change in practice. The subsequent re-audit demonstrated significant improvements in the quality of reports.

INTRODUCTION

The Mental Health Review Tribunal (MHRT) was established under the Mental Health Act (1959) in order to provide independent input towards protecting mental health clients' civil liberties. Its successor, the Mental Health Act 1983 (MHA) has strengthened the tribunal's scope in protecting the service user who is involuntarily detained under the act. (Woolf, 1991). The MHRT has the powers to decide on the appropriateness of a service user detainment and on the strength of its decision, discharge a client of the section of MHA.

With the ever-increasing case loads and subsequent temporal increases in involuntary detentions, report writing in everyday psychiatric practice has become progressively more important. (Englestone and Hunter, 2002). These reports are not only valuable records but also serve a purpose in providing a systemic and evidence-based viewpoint towards defining from a good clinical practice perspective as to why it was appropriate to detain the service user. As the majority of the constituents of the tribunal are not from a mental health background the report serves as a primer to the actual meeting. This provides an opportunity for the treating team to present its concerns and subsequent care package.

It has been seen that previous audits have shown that the majority of reports produced do not demonstrate the basic criteria for detention required by the MHA (Ismail et al., 1998), and that the circulation of structured guidelines improves the quality of the reports (Englestone and Hunter, 2002). The regional chairman of the MHRT for England and Wales in the year 2000, following consultation with Royal College of Psychiatrists, has produced a set of comprehensive guidelines for MHRT report writing. These make explicit the nature of information a MHRT would appreciate in a report.
