Directions

Suspend 28.15 grams in 500 ml distilled water. Heat to boiling to dissolve the medium completely. DO NOT AUTOCLAVE. Cool to 45-50°C and aseptically add rehydrated contents of 1 vial of Aeromonas Selective Supplement (FD039). Mix well and pour into sterile Petri plates.

Principle and Interpretation

Aeromonas species occur widely in soil and water where these species cause disease in fish and amphibians. Also found in untreated and chlorinated drinking water, raw food and raw milk (9, 10). It is observed that the major cause of gastrointestinal infections by Aeromonas species (10, 11) is because of ingesting infected water (12, 13). This medium therefore, may be considered as a useful diagnostic aid for investigating diarrhoeal disease (5, 14). Aeromonas medium was found to be superior over some other formulae for detection of Aeromonas species in tap water, bottled water and foods including meat, poultry, fish and seafood (6, 7, 8). Aeromonas Isolation Medium is based on the formulation of Ryan (1). It is a modification of XLD Medium, which supports the growth of Aeromonas, Plesiomonas, Proteus, as well as Enterobacteriaceae so the medium is used as universal medium in the investigation of enteric disease. The selectivity of the medium is increased by the addition of Ampicillin (FD039).

The effectiveness of Ampicillin as a selective agent has been reported by several workers (2, 3, 4, 5).

It was noted that the recovery of Aeromonas species was very low from fresh foods of animal origin when cultivated on clinical media. Also difficulties were encountered in distinguishing the Aeromonas hydrophila group from the background microflora. Polumbo et.al formulated Starch Ampicillin (SA) Agar with starch hydrolysis as the differential trait and ampicillin to suppress the background microflora (15).

Peptone special and yeast extract provide essential nitrogenous compounds. The salts provide the essential minerals and electrolytes. Sodium chloride maintains osmotic equilibrium. Lactose, sorbitose, inositol and xylose are sources of carbon and energy. Ampicillin, bile salts and sodium thioglycollate makes the medium selective. Bromothymol blue and thymol blue acts as indicators giving the characteristic colony colour.
