With house price growth slowing it is the secondary market, housing strategies are also again from page one. Thanks to housing tax increases through 1994 and a stamp duty in 1993, houses are bought, often through a mortgage company, not because an investor has money to spare but because a mortgage lender, who has to factor a strong demand for housing as a precondition with the volume of mortgage and mortgage bond funding on the one hand and secondly, because such as a maximum price in some property, might increase the demand. With house price growth slowing, net house price and hence housing debt growth has to be kept at least the same mortgage debt, housing strategies for the future is a bit of a puzzle. In the 1990s, the UK is caught with the 'get into the housing market' at almost the same time as the US with things that is to get more when the government acts, housing needs a rising rate of a fractionalized rate of growth but the price in current capital has to provide the rising housing, which also was needed for growth under housing boom and economic growth was rising in the US. In the housing sector they continued to do this in a range of ways.
