Questions 1-3 are based on the following scenario:

Laura May Hanson teaches art in a middle school with a diverse student population. She includes the following art appreciation activity in her eighth-grade unit on painting. She shows students slides of paintings exemplifying each of the following three genres: portraits, landscapes, and still-lives. Afterward, students engage in a small group activity in which they are given 20 numbered postcards displaying reproductions of paintings and are asked to classify the paintings by genre. Ms. Hanson tells them to make their choices based on observations they made during the slide presentation. She then asks each group to complete the following two task sheets as they work through the activity.

Activity: Identify the genre of paintings

TASK 1:

Examine each of the reproductions in your set of 20 postcards, and classify each painting according to its genre. Use the Ot - Answer- prefer constructing knowledge to receiving information passively

In the sample sets given to each group, Ms. Hanson includes reproductions of paintings created in a wide range of time periods and cultural traditions, including cultures represented by students' own backgrounds. By doing this, Ms. Hanson best demonstrates an understanding of the importance of:
taking advantage of the diversity within and beyond the classroom to create a classroom environment that respects and celebrates differences helping students make connections between their prior learning experiences and those that are new to them - Answer- taking advantage of the diversity within and beyond the classroom to create a classroom environment that respects and celebrates differences

Jamie is a student in Ms. Hanson's class who has a learning disability that is likely to make it difficult for him to participate fully in the group classification activity. Ms. Hanson can best fulfill her legal and professional responsibilities toward this student by taking which of the following steps first?
providing Jamie with a related alternative activity that he could work on independently and complete successfully arranging for Jamie to complete the activity in the resource room with the support of the special education teacher
