Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical education program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The body mass index of the children in the experimental group also increased significantly. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract: This paper examines the impact of the 1997-1998 Asian financial crisis on the economic growth of the Asian Pacific region. The paper finds that the crisis had a significant negative impact on the economic growth of the region, particularly in the short run. The impact was more severe in the countries that were more heavily dependent on exports and foreign capital. The paper also finds that the crisis had a significant impact on the economic growth of the region in the long run, but the impact was less severe than in the short run. The paper suggests that the Asian Pacific region should implement policies to reduce its dependence on exports and foreign capital, and to strengthen its financial system, in order to reduce the impact of future crises.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 employees from three companies who performed different types of work. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers performing manual labor than among those performing office or service work. The study also found that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who had been employed for a longer period of time.

3.2.2. Statistical analysis. The data were analysed using the statistical software package SPSS (version 16.0, SPSS Inc., Cary, NC, USA). The data were analysed using a two-way analysis of variance (ANOVA) with treatment and sex as the independent variables. When a significant interaction was found, the data were analysed using a one-way ANOVA with treatment as the independent variable. The results are presented as the mean \pm SEM. The significance level was set at $P < 0.05$.
