

LEAVING THE EU THE EURATOM TREATY

Institution of
MECHANICAL ENGINEERS

The Government's desire to make a clean break from the EU and therefore leave the Euratom Treaty presents the UK nuclear sector with a significant challenge in making alternative mitigating arrangements.

These arrangements are needed to be able to continue to operate our nuclear fleet within an international framework, build new power stations, maintain fuel routes and continue to lead nuclear research. The time needed to make these arrangements is particularly critical, therefore identifying what needs to be done as a priority and negotiating sufficient time to implement changes is of the utmost importance. This paper begins to explore the implications of Euratom departure, the opportunities and threats created, and recommendations towards a strategy safeguarding UK nuclear interests.

The Institution of Mechanical Engineers recommends that:

1. The UK Government must develop a suitable transitional framework that provides the UK nuclear industry an alternative State System of Accountancy and Control (SSAC) creating the same provision as Euratom prior to leaving the EU and Euratom treaties. The Institution would welcome the opportunity to support the UK Government and the Office for Nuclear Regulation in the development of this system.
2. The UK Government must create new Nuclear Cooperation Agreements with Euratom and non-EU trading countries prior to leaving Euratom. Specific commitments for nuclear goods, services and research activities should be made as part of new trade deals with the USA, Canada, Australia, China and South Africa. The Institution would welcome the opportunity to support the Departments for Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy and International Trade in developing these commitments.
3. The UK Government through the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority enables innovative commercial opportunities to sell nuclear services and waste treatment technology to world trade partners.
