

Question 10.1.1 (10.1.1)

Question 10.1.1 (10.1.1)

Two groups of students were given a test. The first group was given a test with 10 questions, and the second group was given a test with 20 questions. The results of the test are shown in the table below.

- The histogram shows that the first group did better than the second group.
- The histogram shows that the second group did better than the first group.
- The histogram shows that the first group did better than the second group.
- The histogram shows that the second group did better than the first group.

Answer: The histogram shows that the first group did better than the second group.

The histogram shows that the first group did better than the second group. The first group has a higher frequency of scores between 6 and 10, while the second group has a higher frequency of scores between 0 and 5. This indicates that the first group did better on the test.

It is important to note that the histogram only shows the frequency of scores, and does not show the actual scores themselves. Therefore, it is possible that the first group did better on the test, but the second group did better on the test.
