THE Journal of the American Medical Association has published a study that suggests that the use of a computer program to help physicians make decisions about whether to perform a procedure may be beneficial. The study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of Michigan, found that the use of a computer program called "Decision Support System" (DSS) resulted in a higher rate of correct decisions compared to a control group. The DSS was designed to help physicians make decisions about whether to perform a procedure based on a set of criteria. The study found that the DSS was used correctly in 85% of cases, compared to 75% in the control group. The researchers concluded that the use of a computer program to help physicians make decisions about whether to perform a procedure may be beneficial.
