Themba, who was a manager of the Men's Club, approached the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration (the CCMA) seeking severance pay after he was retrenched. The trade union that he belongs to was informed that he was not employed by the Men's Club, but that he was in fact employed by a close corporation named Bad Boys CC. The trade union duly cited Bad Boys CC as the respondent in a referral to the CCMA. The sole member of Bad Boys CC, Tendai Munyai, during conciliation indicated that the Men's Club was insolvent and that Themba had been dismissed for operational reasons. The commissioner advised Themba to refer an unfair dismissal dispute. When the matter was referred for arbitration, both the Men's Club and Bad Boys CC were cited as respondents. After hearing the matter, the commissioner ordered Bad Boys CC to pay Themba an amount of R250 000 for his unfair dismissal. However, it was discovered that Bad Boys CC had no assets. In fact, Tendai Munyai who also participated in the running of the business had provided financial assistance to Bad Boys CC and he had secured claims against the close corporation for repayment of the loan amounts.

Themba intends to seek an order from the Labour Court to the effect that Tendai Munyai was his true employer and that he must pay him the amount of R250 000. With reference to the relevant legislation and case law, indicate what Themba would have to prove in order to hold Tendai Munyai liable.
