Department of Defense Gary Cecchine, 2009 If the Department of Defense DoD moves toward a more integrated employee health system a foundation of information about the current system and requisite elements for such integration will be needed The authors reviewed the research literature and DoD policy documents and interviewed DoD personnel to make several observations about the current state of safety and occupational health SOH arrangements in DoD Currently SOH policy cuts across several organizations at high levels in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and SOH programs are implemented by each of the military services Recently leadership attention has focused on safety mostly apart from occupational health as a separate priority DoD and the services have made efforts to increase coordination including both high level formal councils and through informal relationships among SOH practitioners Health promotion and wellness have received considerable attention within DoD through periodic health assessments and educational programs yet these areas have not benefited from the same increased coordination As DoD contemplates a more integrated approach the authors considered what DoD might learn from civilian experience with integrating employee health activities To address this the authors reviewed civilian models of integration to identify promising approaches and practices that might inform DoD efforts The review of activities related to employee health in DoD including industrial hygiene safety health promotion and wellness occupational health and its relatively mature health information technology infrastructure indicates that there might be little need for DoD to introduce new programs but more need to make use of the information generated by the existing programs in a more coordinated integrated manner provided by publisher Plunkett's Transportation, Supply Chain & Logistics Industry Almanac Jack W.
