The Practical Assessment Task

PAT phases 1 & 2

LESSON 1 TASK ANSWERS

The following is a 'model' answer and shows all the aspects that should be included:

Problem Statement

Many learners find it difficult to learn IT subject terminology, and don't perform well in the multiple choice and match the columns questions in an exam. There does not seem to be any software which could help to solve the problem. I am going to design software to be used by IT teachers and learners. The purpose of the software will be for the user to see the correct definition of a term frequently, so that over time the terms are learned. The software will present IT terms and definitions for grades 10 to 12 as random questions in a test. The advantage of the software will be that it will assist teachers who don't have time to keep giving and checking homework, and it will help IT learners to find the terminology from all three grades in one place. The learners will learn by drill-and-practice, but in a fun way. The user will be able to select the correct term or definition, depending on which type of test they choose, and will get immediate feedback after the test to see how well they have done, and what the correct answers were. I will have to make sure that I have collected and stored all possible terms, and that the teacher can edit my terms and definitions, or add new terms. I will also make sure the teacher can check the learners' progress.

Background

Learners are not doing well in tests involving multiple choice questions and matching of the columns which involve IT terminology. They find it difficult to learn the terms in the limited time available in class, and if they were absent when some terms were taught, they don't know them. Some learners don't understand more difficult terms, and some find they don't really know which terms to learn.

The teacher gives lists of terms to learn for homework, makes learners draw up lists of terms for each chapter in a textbook, and gives learners lists of terms to look up on the internet, but many learners still don't seem to learn enough.

Learners don't have sufficient time, and they have only their current grade's textbook to refer to and so can't learn work from a previous grade. Many different definitions are given for the same term so they are not sure which one is correct. Some of the terms they have to learn are not in the textbook.

A comprehensive list is needed for each grade, to ensure that all terms are defined in clear, unambiguous and understandable language, and to make the information quickly and easily accessible to a learner, preferable stored in one place.

Key aspects of the problem

The curriculum document will be consulted to ascertain which terms must be known. All terms for grade 10, 11 and 12 must be collected, with clear unambiguous definitions for each. Terms which are not listed in the document will be added by the teacher if necessary.

The program will be a drill-and-practice type, so that learners can learn by repetition. The program will offer multiple choice tests, where the definition is provided and the term must be chosen, and match the columns, where the correct definition must be found to fit the term. It is very important that the user should see the correct terms and definitions matched, so these will be shown after each test. While the program will not be a game, an effort will be made to add some entertainment value, so that the learners enjoy the experience.

The program will be used by learners in grades 10 to 12, ages 16 to 18, male and female, who are taking IT as subject, and who are familiar with using computer software. Learners indicated that they want to see their scores and to see which terms they got wrong.
