

Lift Chain Adjustment

The following specifications must be correct for correctly adjusted lift chains (see Figure 13):

- The chain tension must be the same for each chain of the chain set. Chains that have the same tension will move the same amount using the same pressure.
- The chain lengths must be equal for each chain set and the length must be correct for the mast height.
- The chains must travel freely through the complete raising and lowering cycle.

1. Put an 80 to 90 percent capacity load on the forks. Lower the forks as much as possible.
2. Check the amount of the bottom operator platform roller extending below the inner mast weldment of the mast. No more than one-third of the roller can extend below the mast. If the rollers are too low, adjust the chain anchors. Make sure each anchor is adjusted the same amount.

NOTE: When the chain adjustments are complete, make sure that the threads on the nuts of the chain anchors are completely engaged. Make sure all of the adjustment is not removed from the chain anchors so they cannot move in their sockets.

CAUTION

The minimum thread extending above the nut of the chain anchor is two times the chain pitch. Periodic checks must be made to correct chain adjustments for wear.

3. Remove the load from the forks. Check the clearance of the operator platform when the mast is fully extended. The operator platform stops must not touch the stop at the top of the inner mast weldment. The chains are too short if the operator platform touches the stop. Lower the operator platform completely. Check that the tops of the forks are the correct height above the floor as listed below in Step a and Step b. If the forks are not within the specified height above the floor, the chains need to be adjusted. If the chains are too long or too short, adjust the chain anchors. Make sure each anchor is adjusted the same amount.

- a. For the standard lift truck, the top of the forks should be 76.2  $\pm$ 6.35 mm (3.0  $\pm$ 0.25 in.) above the floor in the fully lowered position.
- b. For the furniture lift truck, the top of the forks should be 165.1  $\pm$ 9.525 mm (6.5  $\pm$ 0.375 in.) above the floor in the fully lowered position.

NOTE: If the chain anchors are too loose, the Lowering Interrupt Switches will prevent lowering of the platform and mast.

4. Three-stage mast chain adjustment: Adjust the main lifting chains until the top of the inner mast weldment is at the same height as the top of the outer mast weldment. Adjust the free-lift chain as described in Step 3.
