1 Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus is the most common cause of nosocomial infections. It is a Gram-positive, spherical bacterium that is resistant to many antibiotics. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the hospital environment and to identify the risk factors for its acquisition. A total of 100 samples were collected from different hospital wards and analyzed using standard microbiological techniques. The results showed that 60% of the samples were positive for S. aureus. The highest prevalence was found in the intensive care unit (ICU), followed by the surgical ward. The risk factors for acquisition of S. aureus were found to be contact with the hospital environment, use of antibiotics, and presence of wounds or catheters. These findings highlight the importance of infection control measures in the hospital setting to prevent the spread of S. aureus.

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to determine what consumers want and what problems they are trying to solve. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be unique, valuable, and feasible. The third step is to create a prototype of the product. This allows the company to test the concept and make any necessary adjustments before moving forward. The fourth step is to conduct a feasibility study. This study evaluates the technical, financial, and operational aspects of the product. The final step is to develop a business plan. This plan outlines the company's strategy for marketing, selling, and distributing the product, as well as its financial projections.
