Natural hazards: Review 10 (p. 28)

1. A natural hazard is a naturally occurring physical phenomenon, which poses a potential risk to humanity's future damage to property.
2. The effects of a tropical storm can be reduced by: developing the weather through satellites to provide early warnings and protection; through reinforcing windows; by building houses on stilts to protect against flooding from storm surges.
3. Earthquakes and volcanoes mainly occur along plate margins.
4. The benefits of living near a volcano are fertile soil for farming, wine in the wine industry and getting energy through geothermal power.
5. Tropical storms are formed through the following processes. Firstly the air is heated above the warm tropical oceans, creating air in the region. This upward movement of the air causes up-well air input from the polar surface. This designated air cools as it rises, which causes it to condense to form large thunderstorm clouds. As the air condensed it releases heat, which powers the storm and causes more and more water to be drawn up from the ocean. Because thunderstorms can join together to form a giant spinning storm, it is officially the classified as a storm when winds reach 119 km/h. As the storm moves across the ocean it destroys its strength and then when the storm hits land it loses its momentum as friction with the land causes it to lose power and dissipate.
6. Following a natural disaster, there will be immediate, short- and long-term responses. Long-term responses may be seen to be more significant because they will have a reduced risk of a natural disaster in the future. For example, following the Nepal earthquake 2015, the buildings were built to stricter codes so they could be less likely to be damaged in a future earthquake. Countries that earthquake prepared are often quick to respond to a disaster and they will have planned long-term in case of a natural hazard. For example, after the L'Aquila earthquake in 2009, the G80 Disaster Emergency Committee did not need to provide any aid because Italy is a developed country. In a developing country, immediate responses are more significant than long-term responses. Because the country may not be able to respond long-term planning, such as, making stricter buildings, for example, after the Nepal earthquake in 2015, the G80 contributed 100 million to help support the country's reconstruction.
7. When a new plate is made, the plates overlap, this is a subduction beneath the sea where continental plate. As the moving plate moves underneath it creates and the oceanic magma, which is less fluid than an a continental magma. The magma can break through the surface to form a volcano. These volcanic eruptions are often very violent and explosive.
8. There is a marked change in solar energy outside linked to hurricanes. A sunset is a dark patch on the surface of the Sun. The number of sunspots increases from a minimum to a maximum over a period of 11 years. The more sunspots there are, the more heat that is given off from the Sun, which can lead to higher temperatures on Earth.
9. Carbon dioxide accounts of approximately 80% of a greenhouse gas whose emissions and concentrations have increased by 30% since 1860. Concentrations have increased due to the burning of fossil fuels in industry and power stations. Higher concentrations of carbon dioxide are also caused by transport, such as car exhausts, and due to deforestation.
10. There were a range of primary and secondary effects of the 2015 earthquake in Nepal. A primary effect was the amount of people that were killed and injured in the earthquakes. In total 8000 people died and 23,000 people were injured. These levels were high as the earthquake happened in a developing country, which meant that buildings were not constructed to strict codes and so a large number of buildings were destroyed. Secondary effects included landslides caused by the earthquake, including one in Mount Everest where 21 people were killed and one in the Langtang region which resulted in 250 people missing. Communications have been disrupted with hundreds of people missing. Overall, the earthquake had an estimated 100 people in Nepal and cost US$5 billion in damage.
11. The 2014 Colorado floods in South West England caused a range of effects. Social damage to buildings, including 600 homes flooded and 15 homes evacuated, resulting in a large amount of people requiring temporary shelter. Economic: it caused 100 million worth of damage and approximately 14,000 m<sup>2</sup> of farmland were flooded, which affected farming livelihoods. Environmental damage was done as the flood water and stagnant floodwater led to the re-oxygenation of the water pumped back into the river.

12. There is evidence to support or to reject the statement. Counter-arguments and evidence are difficult, due to the different magnitudes, lengths and depths of different earthquakes. An M7.0 earthquake more damaged a town further from an L7.0 or M6.0, which would be expected to happen. The L'Aquila earthquake in Italy in 2009 for example, cost US$10 billion but the earthquakes in Nepal in 2015 cost US$10 billion, although the earthquakes in Nepal were of a higher magnitude. More developed countries may have made adaptations to buildings, so they may be built to better building levels, resulting in fewer deaths and injuries. In the Nepal earthquakes, 8000 people died and 23,000 people were injured compared to the L'Aquila earthquake in Italy, where 308 people died and 1,000 people were injured. However, the location of the houses and the related to the level of development of a town may be a better indicator of early deaths after an earthquake but it may take time to make a case in L'Aquila to make sure that damage to the communities is a disaster. The economic effects in a developed country will be higher but the social effects are probably more devastating in a developing country.

The living world: Review 10 (p. 57/58)

Comprehension

  - a. One of four types, and characteristics, or amount of water.
  - b. One of climate that, temperature, weather, linked to changes from equatorial, coastal or mountain ranges.
2. Answers will vary according to case study. Here the example is Spotted Forest, Essex.
  - a. Yes, such as English ivy and wood, protected trees with many thick branches, deciduous trees such as oak, beech, birch, 2000-year-old trees, several warblers, large, commercial such as grey squirrels and muntjac deer.
  - b. One of keeping the forest prevents the deer from raiding and causing damage to the forest. The Spotted Forest Act imposed a restriction that the trees blocked out light from the ground level vegetation. Deer waste around the forest at night, human recreation such as walking, horse riding and mountain biking and damage resulted as pollution has affected the forest trees.
  - c. One of powerful storms, such as the Great Storm of 1987, occasional droughts, such as 1976-77. A large deer population may lead to over grazing and damage to the forest structure.

Response questions

  - a. The atmosphere has three main layers: stratosphere (O<sub>3</sub> cells), mesosphere (O<sub>2</sub> and NO<sub>2</sub> cells). The stratosphere and ground layers are not significant.
  - b. The canopy layer, which consists of evergreen trees, blocks sunlight from reaching the ground level. Without sunlight the vegetation cannot photosynthesise and grow.
  - a. Most vegetation below the canopy layer.
  - b. This is where most of the food is made, nuts, seedlings. The ground level is dark and plants do not grow well so there is little food at this level.
  - c. There is a wide range of adaptations as this is a very old ecosystem, relatively unaffected by recent climate cycles, and so creatures have had a long time to evolve. Most growing conditions that, soil, sunlight have evolved plants and animals to adapt to a balance with the animals and food with each other.
  - d. A wide range of adaptation of species, variation of food chains and insects, lots of genetic material which could have been useful to people. The ecosystem becomes more stable and less resistant to change (e.g. in climate).
  - e. The soil is exposed to erosion, providing local flooding, natural vegetation unable to regrow and loss of local biodiversity.
  - f. The absorption of CO<sub>2</sub> is greatly reduced, so it is not stored and more remains in the atmosphere, increasing the greenhouse effect. Loss of global diversity. Loss of carbon forests production.
