Chinese fury as key deal blocked

By [Name] in [Location]

Chinese officials have expressed anger at the Australian government's decision to block a $1.5-billion deal to build a new airport in Beijing. The deal, which was part of a larger infrastructure package, was seen as a key test case for the two countries' relationship. Australian officials say the deal was blocked because it did not meet the requirements of the Australian government's procurement process. Chinese officials, however, say the deal was blocked because it was not in the national interest. The deal was part of a larger infrastructure package that included a new airport in Beijing, a new highway in Shanghai, and a new bridge in Hong Kong.
