Abstract: The integrated view of the human body as a single system, rather than as a collection of separate parts, is a key concept in the study of human health and disease. This paper discusses the importance of this concept in the development of a new approach to the study of human health and disease, one that is based on the idea of the human body as a single system. The paper also discusses the challenges of this approach and the need for a new paradigm in the study of human health and disease.
