POWER STEERINGGENERAL DESCRIPTION

The power assisted steering system consists of the power steering pump (Fig. 1) which operates on engine power, transmission fluid. For specifications, see Technical Data.

A reservoir (Fig. 2) houses the fluid in a supply-driven valve assembly.

The reservoir may be located on the inner edge of the engine compartment (the pump, reservoir and hoses are shown in Fig. 2) or on the rear of the engine compartment.

The automatic transmission fluid is pumped at high pressure (at the power steering valve, Fig. 3) which is also driven by the pump to a remote-mounted rack and pinion gear assembly (Fig. 4).

Steering assistance is obtained by drawing the high-pressure fluid to either side of a piston mounted on the rack, and returning it to the tank when not in use.

The degree of steering assistance is determined by the control valve, which is mounted on the rack.

In the rack control valve, movement of the steering wheel causes a piston with three control pistons in each corner, up or down, which also control the rack and pinion gear assembly on either side of the rack, which operates the rack and pinion gear assembly.
