

The 1997-1998 El Niño event had a significant impact on the biodiversity of the Mediterranean Basin. The event was characterized by a strong warming of the sea surface temperatures in the eastern Mediterranean, which led to a shift in the distribution of many marine species. This shift was particularly pronounced in the case of the Mediterranean Sea, where the sea surface temperatures increased by up to 3°C. The resulting changes in the marine environment had a profound effect on the biodiversity of the region, with many species experiencing a decline in their populations. The impact of the El Niño event on the biodiversity of the Mediterranean Basin was also reflected in the changes in the distribution of the species. Many species that were previously found in the eastern Mediterranean moved to the western Mediterranean, while others moved to the northern Mediterranean. This shift in the distribution of the species was a direct result of the changes in the sea surface temperatures caused by the El Niño event.
