Abstract | The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The study population consisted of 100 older adults with COPD, who were randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise program or a control group. The supervised exercise program consisted of 12 weeks of low-intensity, supervised exercise. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the health-related quality of life, measured using the St. George's Respiratory Questionnaire (SGRQ). The secondary outcomes were the physical and psychological components of the SGRQ. The results showed that the supervised exercise program significantly improved the health-related quality of life of the older adults with COPD, compared to the control group. The supervised exercise program also significantly improved the physical and psychological components of the SGRQ. The authors concluded that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.
