

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have free trade across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various non-tariff trade barriers, which impede the free flow of trade. Examples of these barriers include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, before the harmonization of national export and import policies, each nation would adopt policies to protect themselves. According to Figure 10, a free trade system improves the domestic welfare because it enables the consumers to purchase the goods at a lower price and also improves the domestic supply since producers receive domestic supplies at a higher and better price and also better prices of these goods are also available for the consumers. In Figure 10, the equilibrium price under free trade is P_1 and the equilibrium quantity is Q_1 , which is produced only by domestic firms.

Free Trade

It shows in free trade system, the total supply of domestic goods is Q_1 and the price is P_1 . When the world price is P_2 , domestic supply is Q_2 and domestic demand is Q_3 . At price P_2 , domestic producers are producing Q_2 and domestic consumers are purchasing Q_3 . Thus, domestic firms are producing less under free trade system. The total surplus is the sum of the producer and consumer surplus.
