

Checkpoint 1:

- Why is it challenging to determine the number of species on Earth?
  - Because many organisms are hard to locate due to their size, behavior, and/or hard to explore habitat.
- Why are estimates of species diversity valuable to environmental scientists?
  - So that they can study and observe changes over time.
- What is the difference between species richness and species evenness? Why are they both important measures?
  - Species richness is the number of species in a given area and species evenness is the population of each species in proportion to one another. They are both important measures because one without the other doesn't give the whole picture and both are needed to accurately depict the biodiversity of an area.

Checkpoint 2:

- What is evolution and what are the three main ways in which it occurs?
  - Evolution is the change of genetic composition over time. It occurs through artificial selection, natural selection and other random processes.
- How are artificial and natural selection similar? How are they different?
  - They are similar because they both can benefit the organism in terms of fitness. They are different because artificial selection involves manipulation from humans and natural selection does not.
- How does evolution lead to biodiversity?
  - Evolution leads to biodiversity because recombination and mutations during evolution introduce new combinations of genes in organisms.

Checkpoint 3:

- How does geographical isolation lead to reproductive isolation?
  - As time passes during geographical isolation, organisms eventually evolve to a point where they cannot reproduce with their relatives from a different area.
- What factors influence a species' chances of adapting successfully to a change in its environment?
  - The species' generation length and genetic variation.
- Why is the pace of human-driven evolution faster than that of natural evolutionary processes?
  - Because scientists can genetically modify organisms and use careful selection rather than waiting for nature to fuel evolution by chance.

Checkpoint 4:

- How do fundamental niches and realized niches differ?
  - Fundamental niches are broad guidelines for which each organism can survive and realized niches are the specific conditions in which an organism is currently surviving.
- How does environmental change determine species distribution? When does it lead to extinction?

Trout Bror Jonsson,Nina Jonsson,2011-05-03 Destruction of habitat is the major cause for loss of biodiversity including variation in life history and habitat ecology Each species and population adapts to its environment adaptations visible in morphology ecology behaviour physiology and genetics Here the authors present the population ecology of Atlantic salmon and brown trout and how it is influenced by the environment in terms of growth migration spawning and recruitment Salmonids appeared as freshwater fish some 50 million years ago Atlantic salmon and brown trout evolved in the Atlantic basin Atlantic salmon in North America and Europe brown trout in Europe Northern Africa and Western Asia The species live in small streams as well as large rivers lakes estuaries coastal seas and oceans with brown trout better adapted to small streams and less well adapted to feeding in the ocean than Atlantic salmon Smolt and adult sizes and longevity are constrained by habitat conditions of populations spawning in small streams Feeding wintering and spawning opportunities influence migratory versus resident lifestyles while the growth rate influences egg size and number age at maturity reproductive success and longevity Further early experiences influence later performance For instance juvenile behaviour influences adult homing competition for spawning habitat partner finding and predator avoidance The abundance of wild Atlantic salmon populations has declined in recent years climate change and escaped farmed salmon are major threats The climate influences through changes in temperature and flow while escaped farmed salmon do so through ecological competition interbreeding and the spreading of contagious diseases The authors pinpoint essential problems and offer suggestions as to how they can be reduced In this context population enhancement habitat restoration and management are also discussed The text closes with a presentation of what the authors view as major scientific challenges in ecological research on these species
