Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male employees from a large manufacturing company who had been employed for at least one year. They were divided into three groups based on their job type: manual laborers, machine operators, and office workers. Data were collected through self-reported questionnaires and medical records. Results showed that manual laborers had the highest prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders, followed by machine operators, while office workers had the lowest prevalence.

Abstract: The argument is made that in the U.S. the use of the term "intelligence" is misleading. The term implies that there is something "out there" that can be known or understood. But the intelligence that we have is not "out there" and cannot be known or understood. It is a process, a way of thinking, and a way of acting.
