

Unit 10: Reading

Active ReadingSection: How Population Change Is Measured

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

Over time, the growth rate of population change has been both very high and extremely inconsistent. In fact, almost every nation's policies, especially in the third world, were geared toward low birth rates, resulting in a dramatic drop in the average fertility rate. In fact, in population growth studies, the fact that in each year of child production, the mother's age is not the same, and young women are not having children, has led to a new population growth rate. This new rate is called the "replacement rate" and is the average number of children that a woman must have to replace herself and her partner.

Section: How Population Change Is Measured

The average rate of the change in population is called the "growth rate." This rate is measured in terms of the number of children born per woman. A woman's age is also measured by the number of children she has had. This is called the "fertility rate."

Below are some questions about the rate of the change in population. Read the passage and answer the questions.

- _____ 1. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 2. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 3. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 4. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 5. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 6. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.

- _____ 7. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
- _____ 8. The average rate of change in population is the average number of children born per woman.
