Reciprocal play helps children develop strong social skills because it involves "negotiation at every point" of two personal communications. Children learn how to understand how others perceive the world and how to negotiate when they disagree or know within the story they are creating. This peer interaction is also integral to their development as they are able to form functional (reciprocal) relationships with other playmates through the context of pretend play. Studies have demonstrated that children who are shy and withdrawn and engage less often in social interaction with peers than normally developing children often fail to develop important social skills and become rejected children as they move into middle childhood (Rubin, Burgess, & Coie, 2002). Shy and withdrawn children often have over-protective parents who will intervene when the child is faced with a conflict and solve the problem, which puts the child at a disadvantage because he/she is not learning important social skills, such as negotiation, and generating solutions to social problems on his/her own (Rubin, Burgess, & Coie, p.

Working with children can sometimes be a fun and adventurous task, as well as a tiring and demanding job. Seeing as children often get into a lot of activities, it can sometimes be a tiring task just to keep up with them. However, having the opportunity to observe a child by the way they interact with their peers can also make a difference. Especially if you are studying about their development or you are simply curious as to how a child perceives the world. Making observation reports can also be a very helpful way for you to get started.
