Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 6-week training program on the psychophysiological responses of young adults during a simulated military task. Twenty-four participants were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The control group performed the task without training, while the training group underwent a 6-week training program before performing the task. The results showed that the training group had significantly lower heart rate, blood pressure, and skin temperature compared to the control group during the task. These findings suggest that a 6-week training program can improve physiological responses during a simulated military task.
