

Biological 'Fitness' and Physiology 11

Late 19th-Century Biologists and the events leading to the 19th C.

Introduction:

During the 19th century, biologists began to study the processes of life, and the way in which the body is adapted to its environment. This led to the development of the theory of evolution, which states that all life forms have evolved from a common ancestor. The theory of evolution is based on the principle of natural selection, which states that organisms with the most favourable traits will survive and reproduce, while those with less favourable traits will die out.

Biologists of the 19th C.: Darwin and his contemporaries:

1. Charles Darwin (1809-1882) - English naturalist, geologist and biologist, best known for his contributions to evolutionary biology.
2. Alfred Russel Wallace (1815-1913) - English naturalist, biologist, and explorer, co-discoverer of the theory of evolution.
3. Thomas Malthus (1798-1824) - English economist and demographer, best known for his theory of population growth.
4. Lamarck (1744-1829) - French naturalist and biologist, known for his theory of inheritance of acquired characteristics.
5. Erasmus Darwin (1731-1802) - English physician and naturalist, known for his theory of evolution.
6. Jean-Baptiste Lamarck (1744-1829) - French naturalist and biologist, known for his theory of inheritance of acquired characteristics.

Biological 'Fitness' (Darwin's 1859):

Biological 'Fitness' is a measure of an organism's ability to survive and reproduce. It is based on the principle of natural selection, which states that organisms with the most favourable traits will survive and reproduce, while those with less favourable traits will die out.

Other factors leading to the 19th C.

1. The Industrial Revolution (18th-19th C.) - A period of rapid industrialization and technological advancement, which led to the development of the theory of evolution.
2. The discovery of fossils (18th-19th C.) - The discovery of fossils led to the development of the theory of evolution, which states that all life forms have evolved from a common ancestor.
3. The discovery of the cell (19th C.) - The discovery of the cell led to the development of the theory of evolution, which states that all life forms have evolved from a common ancestor.
4. The discovery of the laws of inheritance (19th C.) - The discovery of the laws of inheritance led to the development of the theory of evolution, which states that all life forms have evolved from a common ancestor.
