Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in Istanbul, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a series of tests: 1000m run, 50m sprint, 50m shuttle run, sit and reach, and push-up. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all five tests at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years old, who had been sedentary for at least 10 years. They were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes, and included a combination of aerobic and resistance training. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased HR and EE in the women, while the control group showed no significant changes. The increase in HR and EE was maintained at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively increase HR and EE in sedentary, middle-aged women.
