

8.9 Using a cranked bar to release the offset sphere joint from the differential

8.12a Recover the preload shim fitted behind the left-hand end cover

8.12b Recover the detent sleeve . . .

cover and the body of the joint. Pivot the lever against the bolt head directly beneath the end cover. Strike the other end of the lever with a few sharp hammer blows until the joint is released and moves out slightly (see illustration).

10 Undo and remove the retaining nuts securing both the upper and lower swivel hub balljoints to the suspension arms. Separate the balljoint tapers using a universal balljoint separator.

11 Support the swivel hub to avoid stretching the flexible brake hose and withdraw the driveshaft, complete with inner offset sphere joint, out of the differential sufficiently to allow removal of the end cover. Temporarily locate the upper balljoint into the suspension arm and refit the nut loosely to support the swivel hub.

All models

12 Undo and remove the five bolts and spring washers securing the relevant end cover to the side of the differential housing. Lift off the end cover together with its gasket and, if working on the left-hand side, recover the preload shim fitted behind the end cover (see illustration). Note: If working on the right-hand side end cover of the later rod-change type transmission take care not to lose the selector shaft detent sleeve, spring and ball which will be released as the cover is withdrawn (see illustrations).

13 Using a screwdriver or suitable lever, prise the oil seal from the end cover (see illustration). Carefully press in a new seal or tap it in using a flat block of wood to distribute the load. Ensure that the seal enters the end cover squarely and that the open side of the seal faces inwards.

14 Clean off all traces of old gasket from the mating faces of the end cover and differential housing, and ensure that the faces are clean and dry.

15 Refitting is the reverse sequence to removal, bearing in mind the following points:

- Use a new end cover gasket lightly smeared on both sides with joining compound.
- Tighten all nuts and bolts to the specified torque, referring to Chapter 8 for torque wrench settings applicable to the driveshaft and suspension components.

8.12c . . . spring and ball fitted behind the right-hand end cover on later models

- When refitting an offset sphere driveshaft joint ensure that the joint is fully engaged on the differential gearshaft. If necessary wrap a long worm-drive hose clip around the joint and tap the head of the clip with a mallet until the joint is fully home.
- Refill the engine/transmission with oil as described in Chapter 1 on completion.

Selector shaft oil seal

General information

16 Oil leakage from the gear selector shaft oil seal is a common occurrence on the rod-change type transmissions and may re-occur quite quickly even after renewing the oil seal.

8.13 Levering out the end cover oil seal

If the problem persists it may be cured by fitting a nylon bush and O-ring seal, obtainable from your dealer, behind the main oil seal (see illustration). The bush will align the shaft centrally in the seal, making the seal more effective.

17 Later transmissions are fitted with a larger type of nylon bush during production, and should not need modifying. Note however that this later bush is not suitable for use on any transmission to which it has not been fitted as standard.

18 After fitting a nylon bush to the selector shaft, check selection of all gears: any stiffness evident will indicate that the transmission is not suitable for modification, and the bush should be removed.

8.16 Selector shaft nylon bush and O-ring (A) fitted behind main oil seal (B)
