The difference in the way that you conceptualized the pairing (highlighting just one characteristic instead of both) is an indication of the way you and your partner think about each other.

Other important areas include electronic journals, Internet and off-line databases and linking and reporting facilities. The following "must haves" for librarians and professionals from upper to all other types of linking systems have emerged and should be considered a minimum and also a baseline to determine what resources are needed to achieve successful results.

1. The first step in the process of the development of a new product is the identification of a market need. This is done by conducting market research, which involves gathering information about the needs and preferences of potential customers. This information is then used to develop a product concept that meets the identified need.
2. The second step is the development of a business plan. This plan outlines the financial and operational aspects of the new product, including the costs of production, the pricing strategy, and the marketing and distribution plan. The business plan is used to secure financing and to guide the development of the product.
3. The third step is the development of a prototype. This is a preliminary version of the product that is used to test the design and to gather feedback from potential customers. The prototype is typically made from a material that is easy to work with, such as wood or plastic, and it is often made in a small quantity.
4. The fourth step is the development of a final product. This is the version of the product that is ready for production. It is typically made from a material that is more durable and more expensive than the prototype material, and it is often made in a larger quantity.
5. The fifth step is the marketing and distribution of the product. This involves promoting the product to potential customers and getting it into the hands of the end user. This can be done through a variety of channels, including direct sales, retail stores, and online sales.
