There is no evidence, as presented in the report (table 1), of a decrease in the number of the use of the following substances: heroin, cocaine, LSD, or alcohol. The findings of the Berlin et al. (11), Schuckman et al. (12), and the present study (table 1) are inconsistent with the authors' claim that there is a decrease in the use of these substances. The authors' claim is based on the fact that the use of these substances is decreasing in the general population (13,14).
