

PROTEIN SYNTHESIS

TRANSLATION

1. Translation is the process of synthesizing a protein from an mRNA template. The mRNA template is read in groups of three bases called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid.

2. During translation, the ribosome moves along the mRNA template, reading the codons and adding the corresponding amino acids to the growing polypeptide chain.

3. The process of translation continues until a stop codon is reached, at which point the polypeptide chain is released.

THE GENETIC CODE

"One codon at a time"

1. Biological systems use sequences of three nucleotides to specify the amino acids that are used to build proteins. These sequences are called codons.

2. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid. The genetic code is a "dictionary" of all the combinations of three nucleotides that specify the 20 amino acids.

3. The genetic code is universal, meaning that it is the same in all organisms. This allows scientists to compare the genetic codes of different organisms to determine their evolutionary relationships.

4. The genetic code is a triplet code, meaning that each amino acid is specified by a sequence of three nucleotides.

"One gene - one protein"

1. Each gene contains the instructions for building a specific protein. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene determines the sequence of amino acids in the protein.

2. The sequence of amino acids in a protein determines its shape and function. Proteins are the molecules that carry out most of the work in a cell.

3. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene also determines the rate at which the protein is produced.

4. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene also determines the stability of the protein.

5. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene also determines the location of the protein in the cell.

6. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene also determines the function of the protein.

7. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene also determines the rate at which the protein is degraded.
