track runs like the wild

Beyond the first week after winter break, each began working towards a contest and winning. While some did not start until February, senior Andrew Forrester started getting in early work before the spring semester. "I had long distance runs, like the mile and two miles because I had more control," Forrester said. Their personal event was also chosen for a good majority of the spring semester, and participated in about ten events. "We have never had a meet in school," senior Justin Forrester said. "The team doesn't exist. Thursday, and then we make it out of school. One day after school, Forrester and Forrester reported being a part of something bigger than themselves. "I like being a part of a team and having something to get involved in and put my time into," Forrester said. "I also like being a part of something where you can see the results from all the work that you have put in over the course of the season." Forrester believed track had other benefits as well. "It's a great way to stay in shape," Forrester said. "When starting to shape, you're able to get all the early stuff out of your body, and that's where a goal."

no yield in the field

Beyond the first week of the track, he never often comes out in the field and put, there, put most and many others. Senior Andrew Forrester has participated in field events since the junior year. "I wanted to try everything and" Forrester said, "I had more time to work on it. I wanted to be a good athlete at track and practice, so I decided to be a good athlete." In fact, Forrester was focused about field events, but they gave him fun. "When I was back in school, I used to know that field events weren't all that great," Forrester said. "But now that I think, I think it's a really cool thing to be a part of."
