

1. Angle Pairs: Two adjacent angles that share a common vertex and a common side are called adjacent angles. If the non-common sides form a straight line, they are called a linear pair. If they form a right angle, they are called complementary angles. If they form a straight line, they are called supplementary angles.

2. Angle Relationships: Angles that share a common vertex and a common side but do not share a common ray are called adjacent angles. Angles that do not share a common vertex or a common side are called non-adjacent angles. Angles that are formed by two parallel lines intersected by a transversal are called corresponding angles, alternate interior angles, and same-side interior angles. Angles that are formed by two perpendicular lines intersected by a transversal are called right angles. Angles that are formed by two parallel lines intersected by a transversal and are not adjacent are called corresponding angles, alternate interior angles, and same-side interior angles.

3. Angle Measurement: The measure of an angle is the amount of rotation between two rays that share a common endpoint. The unit of measurement for angles is degrees.

4. Angle Construction: To construct an angle, you need a ray and a point. You can use a protractor to draw an angle of a given measure. You can also use a compass and straightedge to construct an angle of a given measure.

5. Angle Relationships: If two angles are adjacent and their non-common sides form a straight line, then the angles are supplementary. If two angles are adjacent and their non-common sides form a right angle, then the angles are complementary. If two angles are not adjacent but are formed by two parallel lines intersected by a transversal, then the angles are corresponding angles, alternate interior angles, and same-side interior angles.
