

Student Exploration: Half-life

Background: Scientists learn things through science. Scientists collect evidence and use their observations to make conclusions.

A lot of scientific evidence has shown that, in radioactive atoms, half change every year. Radioactive atoms follow a predictable pattern called half-life. Every half-life, half of the particles in the sample have changed into a different element.

Half-life is the amount of time it takes for half of the atoms in a radioactive substance to change.

Activity 1a	How the simulation works
Background:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>The percentage of atoms that change half-life and become stable are constant.</li> <li>Observe that the number of the atoms and the number of stable atoms.</li> </ul>

Question: How do we measure the rate of radioactive decay?

- Activity 1a: Radioactive Half-Life Use the simulation of the atoms and the half-life.
  - What happens when the number of unstable and changed atoms in the simulation is 100? The number of atoms is 100. The number of stable atoms is 0.
  - As the number of unstable and changed atoms change in the simulation, what happens to the number of stable atoms? The number of stable atoms increases as the number of unstable atoms decreases.
- Activity 1b: Radioactive Half-Life Use the simulation of the atoms and the half-life.
  - What happens when the number of unstable and changed atoms in the simulation is 100? The number of atoms is 100. The number of stable atoms is 0.
  - As the number of unstable and changed atoms change in the simulation, what happens to the number of stable atoms? The number of stable atoms increases as the number of unstable atoms decreases.
